NOT ENOUGH TAXIS, SAY LONDON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Taxi drivers may well have seen the recent article written by David Williams which says that London's taxi trade is under threat because there are not enough taxis available at peak times. The report on which the article is based has been published by The London Chamber of Commerce. Detailed figures, which have been compiled by the London Chamber of Commerce (LCCI), together with pollsters Communicate Research, show that the industry's failure to attract new or younger drivers to study the Knowledge could threaten the very roots of the cab trade. Readers may well consider this is just more doom and gloom about the trade but on reading the report it is clear that there is a problem in the number of taxis available at certain times of the day.
